Paired State - Nagaland – An Introduction

Nagaland, state of India, lying in the hills and mountains of the northeastern part of the country. It is one of the smaller states of India. Nagaland is bounded by the Indian states of Arunachal Pradesh to the northeast, Manipur to the south, and Assam to the west and northwest and the country of Myanmar (Burma) to the east. The state capital is Kohima.

Nagaland has a monsoonal (wet-dry) climate. Annual rainfall averages between 70 and 100 inches. Average temperatures decrease with greater elevation; in the summer temperatures range from the low about 21–23 °C to the low about 38–40 °C. While in the winter they rarely drop below 4 °C. Forests cover about one-sixth of Nagaland are tropical and subtropical evergreen forests, containing palms, rattan, and bamboo, as well as valuable timber species.

Elephants, tigers, leopards, bears, several kinds of monkeys, sambar deer, buffalo, wild oxen, and the occasional rhinoceros live in the lower hills.

The Nagas, an Indo-Asiatic people, form more than 20 tribes, as well as numerous subtribes, and each one has a specific geographic distribution. The Konyaks are the largest tribe, followed by the Aos, Tangkhuls, Semas, and Angamis.

Other tribes include the Lothas, Sangtams, Phoms, Changs, Khiemnungams, Yimchungres, Zeliangs, Chakhesangs (Chokri), and Rengmas.

The Naga tribes lack a common language; there are about 60 spoken dialects, all belonging to the Sino-Tibetan language family. In some areas dialects vary even from village to village. Many Nagas speak Hindi and English. English is the official language of the state.

Nagaland is a rural state. More than four-fifths of the population lives in small isolated villages. The villages are usually divided into khels, or quarters, each with its own headmen and administration. Dimapur and Kohima are the only urban centre with more than 50,000 people. harmonium, nickel, cobalt, iron ore, and limestone are found in Nagaland, but only low-grade coal deposits are mined at present. Power generation depends mainly on diesel plants, though hydroelectric output has increased.

Some of the significant festivals for each major tribe are: Sekrenyi Moatsu, Tsungremong Tsukhenyie, Sekrenyi Kundanglem, Lem Bushu Jiba, Miu Festival, Tsokum

In 1967, the Nagaland Assembly proclaimed Indian English as the official language of Nagaland and it is the medium for education in Nagaland. Other than English, Nagamese, a creole Language based on Assamese, is widely spoken.
